“Bagoock!”
KRA-KOOWWWWW!

A bolt of lightning seared the air and struck the wolf on its side. The beast stumbled and dug its claws into the dirt.

Thundercluck’s beak fell open. Did I just do that? Then he looked at the wolf’s face. Uh-oh. Little strands of lightning still buzzed on its fur. It looked angry.

The duo crept down the staircase, and Brunhilde lit her sword as they entered the Catacombs.

These were narrow tunnels under the castle, caves even darker than the library. Brunhilde's sword could only shine so far, leaving shadows lurking in every corner.

The heroes crept forward. Approaching the mass in the mist, they saw an enormous foot, its toes rising higher than Brunhilde's head. Another foot lay nearby, and both extended from a massive pair of pajama pants.

Another groan filled the air, and the shadowy form swelled. It was a snoring, sleeping giant.

Another magic tunnel appeared.
“This must go to Midgard,” Brunhilde said.
Thundercluck raised his brows
and wondered, Are we allowed to go there?
Brunhilde shrugged and said,
“Relax!”
